The Swedish Stroke Data Bank (SBDC) is a clinical database of ischemic stroke that contains information from consecutive stroke patients treated at Swedish stroke units. The aim of the present study was to estimate the degree of variation in the SBDC and the proportion of interrater agreement between single observers in SBDC data. Medical records of 449 consecutive ischemic stroke patients, admitted to the 14 Swedish stroke units between 2000 and 2002, were analyzed. Logistic regression analysis was used to adjust the individual risk for a stroke in our analysis for sex, age, and severity of ischemic stroke. The influence of time and length of hospital stay was also analyzed. The mean time from admission to discharge was 31 days. Good interrater agreement was found for the National Institutes of Health Stroke Scale (95% confidence interval, 0.93-0.97) and the modified Rankin scale (0.85-0.89). Good interrater agreement was also found for the Barthel index (0.84-0.87), the Barthel ADL index (0.72-0.84), and the Ischemic Stroke Functional Outcome Scale (0.67-0.84). The influence of time and length of hospital stay on the independent outcome in the SBDC varied between different activities of daily life.
